In accordance with the economic-social strategy, Isla de la Juventud can become the showcase of local development in Cuba, starting with the comprehensive update of its plan until 2030, said the President of the Republic Miguel Díaz-Canel Bermúdez. During a government visit, the first of its kind to the territory, he commented that the endogenous potential and insular condition would facilitate that purpose, but first the feasibility that most of these state entities are of national subordination with management structures in different provinces must be studied. . Likewise, he recognized the role of the university with research and projects that contribute to the effort to make the special municipality prosperous, while he learned - in dialogue with these professionals - the insufficient demand for academic services by the business sector. For his part, Manuel Marreo Cruz, Prime Minister, said that, in order to increase the social equity and quality of life of the population, it is necessary to solve the subjective problems identified and shorten the deadlines in the comprehensive development plan in order to achieve self-sufficiency. of the second Cuban island. Planting was organized by campaigns that allow the population to distribute 30 pounds per capita of grains, fruits, viands and vegetables every month, a similar process will be followed to guarantee five kilograms of animal protein per person, in addition to responding to the imperative of keep the more than 300 hectares (ha) planted under irrigation, said Gustavo Rodríguez Rollero, minister of agriculture. This municipality should set as a goal the seven million cow's milk destined for the industry, the maximum contribution before the so-called special period, said Salvador Valdés Mesa, vice president of the Republic of Cuba, who called on the pineros to work towards the food sovereignty.
